Remembering those who died

Daily Prophet honors those who gave their lives

The Battle of Hogwarts, which ended in the permanent end of Lord Voldemort, was a one in which many ordinary wizards and witches gave their lives for the greater good. Some of these were just students studying for their final year at Hogwarts or witches or wizards who wanted the future generations not to suffer or house-elves who wanted to fight and owls who fought for the well being of their masters. But did these heroes get enough credit? Today, in this edition of the wizarding newspaper, you will know that it was not only Mr. Potter who fought against Lord Voldemort but many ordinary people who too wanted to contribute. The people who died are as follows:

- Hedwig (Owl)
- Alastor Moody (Auror)
- Dobby (A Free Elf)
- Fred Weasley (Student)
- Remus and Nymphadora Lupin
- Severus Snape

These brave heroes gave their lives and we honor them for that.

Snape: Friend or Foe?

This man has created controversy on whether he was fighting for our good or not

Severus Snape, previously a Death Eater, was said to have joined our side and he was said to be in full confidence of Albus Dumbledore. But during the Battle of Hogwarts he was seen to be following the Dark Lord's orders. Thought this man was a Death Eater, he could produce a Patronus. In his early days as the Potions Master, he was spotted helping Harry Potter. He looks like a man with mixed feelings. Before the Second Wizarding War, he was under Albus Dumbledore's commands but apparently he was the one who performed the Killing Curse on the Hogwarts Headmaster. He, as said by many students under his teaching, was very desperate to get the post of the Defense Against the Dark Arts teacher. But even though of all these factors, Mr. Harry Potter, to honor him, gave the middle name 'Severus' to his son for reasons he says he can't reveal.
