Unregistered Animaguses to be fined up to 1000 Galleons

The Department of Magical Law Enforcement yesterday decided that any animagus found to be unregistered will be fined up to 1000 galleons. The explanation for this step was that many unregistered Animaguses were using the skill to steal valuables from magical folks and possibly harm them too. "The fine for the unregistered Animaguses may reach up to 1000 Galleons" said a Ministry of Magic official. If you are a unregistered animagus, please register yourself at the Department of Magical Law Enforcement immediately or send an owl with a envelope marked 'Animagus' to the Ministry of Magic or If you know of any friend or colleague who is a unregistered animagus, please inform him or her about this new law and help make the wizarding society a better and a safer place.

Join the S.P.E.W force!

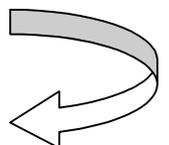

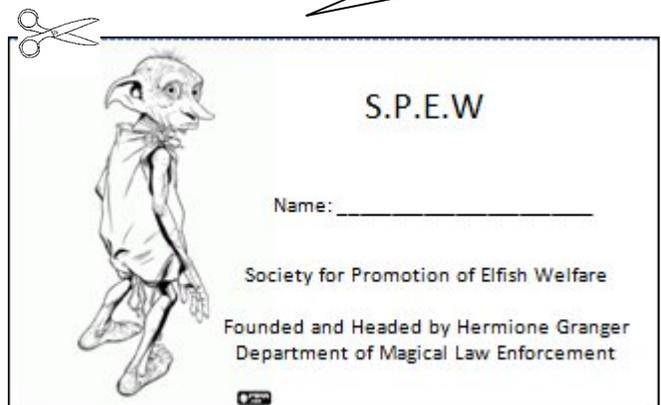

Have you ever felt that the non-magical creatures such as elves also need care, love and freedom and wanted to do something to help these poor creatures? Well, S.P.E.W is just the thing for you! Founded by Hermione Granger in her fifth year of studying at Hogwarts, this society works towards the welfare of the elfish society. The first elf freed was Dobby and many house elves have been freed since then. Now this society is supported by the Ministry Of Magic as well as many students and teachers at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry. The Daily Prophet has also donated considerable amounts of galleons to support this society. As an initiative, the Daily Prophet has attached a Supporter Badge for those who want to support this society.

Azkaban Escapees Caught

Escaped prisoners found near a Muggle village

The prisoners that escaped from Azkaban last month have finally been caught and wizards and witches can now safely remove the protective charms that they may have used to protect their houses. The escapees were found near a Muggle village near London by Mr. Potter and Mr. Weasley of the Auror Department in the Ministry Of Magic. Apparently the prisoners were found in a Muggle house in which the rightful owners were Imperviused by the escaped Death Eaters. The Caterwauling charm had been put around the perimeter of the house and the two experienced Aurors managed to catch the escapees before they could get away again. The reward of 1000 Galleons was rewarded to each of the Aurors, but both decided to donate it the S.P.E.W.
